References Category:3D graphics software Category:C++ softwareQ: How to track two hover jQuery events with parameters on the same element How would one trigger a callback upon both a and b hover events within the same element? I'm looking to run something like this: `jQuery('.item').hover(a, b);` a: do something b: do something ... with the handler and parameters nested within the element. I know I can write a separate function for each: `jQuery('.item').hover(function(a) { a: do something }, function(b) { b: do something });` But that doesn't feel good to me. Is there a jQuery/JS/Jquery-UI way to do this? A: The `hover()` method provides two callbacks, so you can chain together as many as you like: `jQuery('.item').hover(a,b).hover(a, function() { /.../ });` A: there is a method for this. `hover( function, element )` where you don't need to write all the same function over and over again. Q: Can I run WordPress on an old 1.1.6 web server? Can I run
