It is something you have to decide on individually for each business that you want to contact. One of the most basic things you can do to help yourself in this is to find out how the company you want to contact about your listing plans handles queries. Read on to learn more. Who answers your calls and emails? If this is the first thing that comes to your mind, you are probably going to need to check this with the business that is planning on using your listing. Having a clear and direct source of communication will help to put your mind at ease. The next thing to take into consideration is how long you will be able to stay on the phone/internet. How long do they want you to be in contact with them? Is this something you can manage to do for some time, or will you need to schedule a longer term? Some businesses will want you to be in contact with them for a long time, while others will want you to be in contact with them for only a short amount of time. How will you manage all of this? Are you going to use an answering service? If so, are they going to take calls or emails from you? In most cases, you should try and keep your self in the loop so that you do not need to switch the call to voice mail or email. Lastly, if there is a chance of you being able to meet a representative of the company in person, how are you going to manage this? Are you going to meet this person or will you need to do this by means of Skype or other video-chatting programs? the contract provision that he had agreed to make payments for painting the house only "when the last payment" had been made. In the order, the court set the final payment date as "June 17, 1971," which was the date that defendant had agreed to pay. The trial court erred in granting a summary judgment in defendant's favor on plaintiff's cause of action for breach of contract. The order of the trial court is reversed and the cause is remanded for trial of the issues as provided in this opinion 3e33713323
